

Transition To A New Earth

an essay from

Sirius Minor (from Sirius), Quan Yin and Master Djwhal Khul

For those of you who have been following WeSeekToServe.com, you understand from the November update that I will be coming forward, I will externalize to walk among you. In many ways I would have preferred to stay in the background and continue to teach via this website. However, that does not seem to be the wisest choice for the Community of Spiritual Masters and our Allies or for the acceptance from humanity that we do exist.

I think you can understand what I am about to say. As I walk forward among you, my focus will be on those activities rather than Thoughts From A Master. I would have the website remain up and accessible, but beginning in January, 2014, there will be no scheduled postings. And it is also appropriate that our final issue topic be Transition To A New Earth, for we are indeed in a period of significant transition.

I think the period of transition is the most difficult stage in the cycles of spiritual maturation. There is the beginning, the new moment, the fresh start, the big Ah-Ha! where your heart leaps, for you have found something new and wonderful. Your life changes because of the something new and wonderful that you have brought into your worldview and integrated into your being.

Then there is the coming down out of the clouds and realizing that whatever it is that was new and wonderful continues to be part of your life but you need to apply both energy and work in order to make this new and wonderful something an actual demonstration of who you are and what you believe. This period of demonstrating who you are and what you believe can be very satisfying ... and very challenging. For the most part, it can become very satisfying and I would say comfortable.

The difficult part comes when another something comes along that builds upon and expands what you have integrated into your life and you realize that it is necessary to let go, to leave behind part of what you had comfortably and satisfactorily incorporated into your worldview, your mindset, your way of life. And that is the start of the transition.

You know there is something new out there but this time, getting to that something new requires that you leave behind something you truly value. It is not quite so exciting as that flush upon discovering something new and wonderful for the first time. The cost has gone up for what you leave behind. I will tell you, but that is all I can do, is tell you – it cannot be demonstrated – that what you will find at the close of transition when you begin to live in the new environment, in this case the new Earth, that you will be very grateful you made the transition and left behind what needed to be left behind.

So now, with gratitude to the production team of this website and to the guests who came to speak on this website, I leave this part of my service behind and move on to service that is much more closely integrated into the physical-plane lives of humanity.

I face some significant challenges. The first one will be convincing people that I am who I say I am. Everyone is expecting something different, something different in the way I will appear physically, something different in my actions, something different in what I have to say. I can tell you that those who do not get what they are expecting are not going to believe I am who I am. There have been two thousand years to build up images of what I look like, two thousand years of unjustified certainty that this is what I meant when I said thus-and-so, and there is a significant disbelief that I am coming for any other reason than to reward one group and punish another, which could not be further from the truth.

I am not kidding myself, my challenge is substantial. And I would point out that the transition I am making, the one I have just described, is no less and no more challenging than the transition humanity is facing in moving from what exists now to the new Earth. That is where our Off-Earth Allies can be of significant assistance, for they have experienced these transitions themselves, as many have told you. They have visited with those who have experienced these transitions and they have gathered a great deal of information about successfully navigating this period of transition we have before us. And I do mean we this time, those from the Community who are coming to walk by your side, those of the Off-Earth Allies who are coming to walk by your side and all of humanity. We, together, face a considerable transition.

The new Earth will, simply put, be a better place to live a spiritual life. We have talked about institutions again and again. I'm not going to cover that ground again. Rather, I will define what I mean by a spiritual life.

I mean a recognition of relationships of Oneness. Oneness is all about relationships. A spiritual life is all about relationships. So this new Earth will be a better place to foster healthy, loving, joyful, as well as challenging relationships. To get there, we have a lot of cleanup work to do, a lot of decisions to make. But you see, we who come forward are not the ones who will make the decisions or do the cleanup. We can only present the options that we see. That alone should be of service because then you can make informed decisions about which path you take and how quickly you wish to move from where you are and where you have been to that new Earth where it is a much better place to live a spiritual life.

I would like, now, to introduce my guest speakers. Our first speaker is Sirius Minor from, as you might guess, Sirius. Sirius Minor is an androgynous being who is thought by some to be masculine and by others to be feminine. I personally think of Sirius Minor as my friend, one who has balanced the divine masculine and the divine feminine and comes forward in wise and loving service. Sirius Minor.

Sirius Minor

Thank you, Master Yeshua.

You are correct about this period of transition. It is most difficult. The simple fact is that no one wants to let go of something that is comfortable, familiar and satisfying. This is hardly surprising. And yet I think one of your sages has pointed out that if you want to cross the river, you have to untie the boat from the dock and move into the water to reach the other side. That is what a period of transition is. And in the middle of the river, you have some currents, you have some obstructions. You have to maneuver wisely and you have to work at getting to the other side. It doesn't just happen.

So that is my analogy for a period of transition. And if I were going to continue with the analogy, which I will, I would say that the shore you are leaving is quite frankly an unpleasant, chaotic place for far too many of the human family. For far too many of the human family, this place is dark and dangerous and uncomfortable. And those who are comfortable might well want to stay there and ignore the fact that many of their brethren are extremely uncomfortable. It would not be surprising if these people said, "Fine. Let us simply improve the situation of those who are extremely uncomfortable, but let me keep my comfortable place."

You see, that cannot happen, for humanity is One. Energetically, you are simply One, interlinked and interlocked. And you are One with the planet Earth, who is going through a significant rise in frequency. This, too, has been explained. So there is no choice.

I will take that back. There is a choice.

You have the choice to stay behind and thus hold back the entire of humanity, or you can accept the fact that the transition must be made and become a partner in helping us help you to make the transition. We can provide information. We can provide advice ... and guidance, once you have made the decision as to which route you wish to take. We can do a lot of explaining but then we are duty bound to leave you with your freewill to make the choice as to which way forward is most appealing.

However, it must be perfectly clear in this period of transition that your consciousness will expand and your eyes must be opened to see things that you would rather not see, to know things you would rather not know and to leave behind that which you would rather keep with you. This cannot be avoided. This, too, has been said. You have only our word, as Master Yeshua says, to tell you that life on the other shore of that river is indeed a place where you can start anew, include everyone and find a way forward that will enhance the lives of every soul incarnating on this planet.

That is the vision of what you will be building. It can be done. And we who have lived through it and done it, we who have visited those who have also lived through and done it, we are here to help you take those first steps, help you understand your first decisions, help you understand the consequences, as best we can explain, of one decision versus another decision.

You have, in us, experienced prognosticators who can give you encouragement and factual information that you might well consider to be a warning. It will simply be factual information and that is what we are here to do. That is our pleasure – to be thus assisting our younger brothers and sisters who are entering this period of transition to a new Earth. We can help you keep the compelling vision of this new Earth alive and we can help you navigate the often unpleasant period of transition and help you see the joy and the rewards of entering this period enthusiastically, with conscious awareness of what you are leaving behind and what you are moving toward.

I thank you.

Sirius Minor

Yeshua

Thank you, Sirius Minor.

Next, I would introduce to you a dear friend, Quan Yin. She is a diplomat extraordinaire, helping to repair relationships that have been long fractured. We will call upon her to help us with relationships newly fractured as you enter the period of transition. Quan Yin.

Quan Yin

Thank you, Master Yeshua.

There is a significant difference between mourning when a relationship is fractured and becoming very comfortable with the fact that the fracture exists and becoming determined that the fracture was the other person's fault and being quite comfortable with the fact that there is a right and a wrong and that you own the right and the other party has the wrong.

I have found that it is rarely quite so simple. Rarely.

You will find that this period of transition can be an exhilarating experience in assessing the old you and the old life you lived, in assessing all you discover that you have been taking for granted, how you have been navigating the chaos that exists now, trying to restore it to a previous condition or trying to correct it. You will discover you are leaving this attitude and these behaviors behind, and that can be exhilarating.

You will discover that what you can do now is to wisely evaluate what needs to be brought across the river, if I may proceed with the analogy, to the new Earth. You will understand how freeing it can be to leave behind that which is not necessary and that which is damaging, if not to you personally, then to others. That can be an incredibly exhilarating experience, becoming free of ties to institutions and possessions, and it can be very exhilarating to learn in what ways you can help one another.

It can be very exhilarating as work groups form and disband, each with a purpose in mind to help humanity through this period of transition. And one purpose might simply be to enrich the vision of the new Earth so that people know what they are building and can make decisions that will enhance what is built. I would offer you, then, an image of transition that is a period of new experiences, a period of awakening, a period of getting to know yourself better than you have known yourself to this point in time. You will soon know your strengths and know those areas to be strengthened and have an idea as to how to go about using your strengths to help others and using the strengths of others to help strengthen yourself.

Our colleagues are coming forth. They are the first ones to come forth. If they are welcomed, and we sincerely believe they will be, then more of us will come forth, more of your elder brothers and sisters will come forth to walk beside you and offer our experiences and our wisdom to help sustain you in the decisions you make and the work that you do.

So we, on our side, have much gratitude to those who will be coming forward. They are the vanguard. Others will follow. How soon? Much depends upon humanity, but we all very much appreciate the difficulties that can be viewed as opportunities as this transition unfolds. My advice: do not lose the vision of the new Earth and let that vision of the new Earth speak to your heart and sustain you, knowing that you are part of the bridge from what is to what will be.

We are here, your elder brothers and sisters, to offer information, advice and guidance. For even though there are those like me who are not coming forward in the vanguard, we are still accessible to those who are open to hearing us and I want you to remember that.

I thank you.

Quan Yin

Yeshua

Thank you Quan Yin, thank you very much.

It is my pleasure, indeed, to present to you Master Djwhal Khul, our teacher of teachers. It is a privilege to have him with us for this final edition of Thoughts From A Master. Thank you. I give you Djwhal Khul.

Master Djwhal Khul

Thank you, Master Yeshua.

I would like to say that one of the most difficult things about a period of transition is to recognize it. Unfortunately, there are times when one must twist an ankle or stumble or be faced with a totally unexpected chasm to recognize that things are not ever going to be the way they were and that the only way, the only path, is forward. When you recognize that in your heart and in your mind and accept the fact that there is no going back, then you have recognized that you are in a period of transition.

At the point you recognize that you're not going to be able to repair things and make them the way they were, you realize that there is no going back. When you admit that, it is important to recognize that what you are in is a period of transition.

Now, why I do emphasize that? Because there is a tendency towards impatience – with yourself and with others – once you admit that there is no going back, that the past cannot be resurrected and that the situation cannot be repaired to re-create the past. Once you recognize this, then there is a tendency of impatience to simply want to land in the new and better situation and avoid all the processes in the middle. It's rather like walking across the street and saying, "Okay, I'm here in the new place. I'm now on this side of the street, not that side."

It rarely works that way with the kind of massive change that is happening with Mother Earth. We have said much about building a new civilization. We have just touched on a World Renaissance. We have touched on culture shock. These are the symptoms. The sooner you recognize that you are in a period of transition and accept it as a period of transition, the sooner you can begin making much better informed decisions that will benefit not only you but those you associate with because of the example you become.

That is my message. It is very simple. It is short, but it is also true that it is very uncomfortable to stumble through a period of transition denying that there is a transition. That brings a great deal of discomfort. Much better and wiser to recognize that there is a transition afoot and that you cannot simply leap to the new. You navigate to the new. And my advice to you would be don't travel this journey alone. Bring others with you. Join others who recognize that there is a transition in process and find the joy in working together to navigate the transition and begin building what must be built anew.

I thank you.

Djwhal Khul

Yeshua

Thank you, Djwhal Khul.

As I believe you see by now, there are transitions within transitions, for as you recognize that you are in a transition that extends to the entire planet, you are making smaller transitions every day and it is the accumulation of these smaller transitions that brings you forward.

I would add one more thing, and that is give yourself some latitude. Allow yourself to make a mistake or two in these smaller transitions, such that you change your mind, perhaps even backtrack. Give yourself that privilege. You are navigating in a very large transition. Don't expect that every decision will be perfect and that every move you make will be the right one. Have a good and healthy feedback system and allow yourself the privilege of making a few mistakes as you move forward. Learn from the mistakes, laugh at them if you can and keep moving forward. The new Earth is yours to build. It will be under construction for several generations, so you will have a chance to reincarnate and come back to help in the construction and come back to enjoy what has been built while you were straightening things out between lives.

It is time to say goodbye. I will say so long. We will leave this website up and accessible and it is possible that there will be a few more submissions, but they will be sporadic. I will join my colleagues and our main source of communication from this point forward will be WeSeekToServe.com.

As has been explained, we hope to build a network of websites. We do not want all our eggs in one basket, so to speak, so I will be speaking to you through WeSeekToServe and through the other websites as they join the network that will be bringing you our messages.

I thank the readership. I thank you for the questions you have submitted. I thank you for the loyalty you have expressed and I do hope to see you at one public event or another, but remember I cannot be in all places for all people.

My blessings upon you all.
