

Soul Mates, Mate Souls and Soul Splits

an essay from Master Yeshua

I would like to talk about souls.

Soul mates, mate souls and soul splits. We will talk about the various relationships that exist between souls, and the terms that have come into use in order to describe, in the physical plane, the relationship that exists in our realm.

How, for example, does a soul mate differ from a mate soul? In our realm, there is a difference.

Soul mates.

Generally taken, a soul mate is someone that you are compatible with and someone you are meant to be with, someone with an identical outlook or much in common, that sort of thing. It is thought of romantically – the person that is complementary, with whom there exists a deep interpersonal relationship, usually associated with romance and however you choose to partner with someone.

Soul mates is the common term. The question is: Where do these souls come from? What is going on in the inner planes when you have this kind of relationship?

Twin Souls – Different Name, Same Relationship

I would say that in many instances what is labeled as a soul mate is the same as what I call a twin soul. This is a soul that is one of two, and the two souls interweave their incarnated lives over and over and over again. This is usually associated with appropriate bonding, partnering, intimacy and I do mean an adult equivalent of marriage. The romance.

These souls have complementary energy structures. They choose complementary energies to manifest life after life after life. Each is the strength of the other. I think that is a fair way to put it. And together they provide a stable energy balance that has a magnetic attraction to those around them, an energy balance that has a radiatory force when they walk into a room. Such souls might not incarnate at the same time. They might not incarnate with the intention of sharing a life as marital partners or partners in some kind of a permanent union. They might not even meet in a given life.

But over the course of time and over the course of incarnations they repeatedly come in together and balance each other. They more or less evolve and mature together.

These would be soul mates in the common term. Twin souls is another term for the same relationship as it spans and repeats itself in various incarnations as the two souls mature. They are individual but they work together.

Mate Souls / Dipoles

Then we have mate souls. (You see this terminology is extremely confusing.) A mate soul is sometimes called a dipole. I don't think I'm going to add a new name. This relationship is complementary in a totally different way – not complementary in compatibility as it is with twin souls, but complementary in the way of providing the creative tension, providing point and counterpoint. Differing views.

So for instance, you might say that when you have these mate souls or dipoles each creates the tension – the perspective – that the other would be wise to listen to and absorb into their own perspective. They can serve also as balancing, but balancing in a different way.

The point / counterpoint is a clear duality, a clear polarization. When these two souls can come together and each learn from the other then the polarity becomes neutralized. Each, for instance, starts out polarized, but as they come together, they learn from one another.

Mate Souls At Work

Let's say that one incarnation is a positive charge and one is a negative charge – polarity. Yet as they talk and work together, and with open minds and hearts, they view the opposite pole. They understand, learn the other's viewpoint. As they observe, absorb and accept the other's viewpoint as valid, then this electric polarization – and you can picture this lightning flashing between the two – as they accept each other's viewpoints and settle their differences, then the energy between them is complementary in a different way and the sharp polarity tends toward a neutral, progressive middle path.

Pick a troubled spot in the world. I will pick on Northern Ireland. What do we have but an electric, dynamic, futilely brutal positive and negative. You can make either side the positive and either side the negative. It does not matter. The point is there was a lightning violence that flashed between these two poles.

That can happen on an individual basis – let us say with the leaders. Let us say that two souls, who are mate souls, accept the challenge to intervene. Each has a polarized viewpoint, each is capable of being polarized and they work together, coming into a polarized situation. (If not Northern Ireland, then pick a spot.)

Each soul rises to become the leader of a different segment of the battling contingencies, the battling citizenry. And they listen to each other.

After they get through with the fireworks and the positioning and the rabbleroxing, they begin to listen to one another. They listen to the valid points that are made on either side of this argument. They begin to neutralize. This is, of course, not instant peace. But it is a step towards a progressive neutrality. Don't underestimate the power of being neutral, the power of the middle path.

Two Kinds of Neutrality

There are two kinds of neutral, or at least on the continuum of neutrality there are two end points. One is utter apathy. And the other is wisdom.

Let us choose the wisdom end of neutrality, where it becomes wisely obvious that the other pole in this polarized argument has valid points. The other pole has a position, the other pole has a history, the other pole has a laundry list of why it is polarized.

Yet each listens to the other and between the two of them, these leaders – who obviously do not always work alone – reach a neutrality that is wise and dynamic, because they realize that staking out positions at either pole in a polarized atmosphere is futile. It is futility itself.

That is what mate souls can do – carve out the pathway to a wise neutrality, a wise accepting neutrality, not apathetic neutrality.

Now all instances need not be quite so dramatic as making peace in a war that has gone on for a hundred years or more. This could be actually a partnered couple, should there be a reason and the souls choose to do so.

The mate souls come in with certain polarization, but they learn to respect the view that the other person brings. So if you are thinking of politics, then let us take a Republican and a Democrat in the United States, Conservative and Labor in the UK. This might be an ordinary couple, or it might be a high profile couple. The point is that they reach a state of wise neutrality and respect that simply eliminates the polarization that blinds.

Mate souls. They are very useful in helping humanity progress. It is a different balance, a different kind of useful balance than demonstrated by soul mates / twin souls.

Soul Splits

And then we have split souls . . . soul splits.

For a given purpose, a soul at a certain level of maturity determines that it will manage two or more concurrent incarnations. There can be many reasons. Let us just list a couple.

Why Souls Split

Supposing the soul wishes to gain experience more quickly and it therefore incarnates into two identities during the same calendar period on Earth. One identity serves one purpose and one identity serves another purpose. At the end of those two lifetimes, the experiences are integrated into the soul's gestalt.

There can be many reasons for this. It can be so dramatic as action needed in two different areas of the world and the soul is capable of managing an incarnation, one in each area that needs action. So it splits. And when the information is merged into the soul gestalt at the end of these lifetimes, the soul is enriched. If the soul is enriched, then the Divine is enriched because the Oneness network that unites us all is enriched by the advancement and learnings of every single soul.

Think of the soul as an energy node on a vast energy network. If an energy node is, for instance, purged of unhealthy residue from past lives, then the entire network is bolstered. If a single energy node on this vast network is enlightened by allowing for dual experiences in humanity's time line, then the entire energy system benefits.

You could say the same for the neutrality that we talked about in mate souls. Or the positive partnering we spoke of in soul mates.

There's always a purpose when souls split. A soul must be strong enough to accomplish this. There can be more than two splits if the soul is sufficiently advanced.

- There can be personal reasons to the soul.
- There can be reasons to the overarching plan for the advancement of humanity.

- There can be reasons within the overarching plan for the advancement of Creation on Earth.

The soul says, "OK I can handle it. I'll handle two. I'll handle three and I'll put one here and I'll put one there and I'll put one over in the other place."

They each have unique missions; they each have unique lifetime intentions. The soul becomes a mini-oversoul communicating, managing, monitoring three unique lifetimes.

More Splits In Store

As more souls mature and wish to move faster or learn more or serve better, then, yes, you will see more splits. Each of you might or might not be a split of a soul. That simply is an option for various reasons.

The experience of each split, as I said merges into the soul gestalt. And when the soul determines that it is time to reincarnate, the experiences of all the splits is there to be drawn upon.

If you are familiar with a two plug electrical plate then you have a concept of split souls. Because the wire inside the wall that comes to the connection with two outlets is only one wire. That one wire is the soul. If you're going to carry it forward, we will have appliances plugged into that outlet. Each appliance has its own cord, and let us call that cord the connection to the incarnation.

So if you have an electrical outlet on the wall with two options for plugging in, one option might have a toaster plugged in. The other might have a computer. Or one might have a printer plugged in and the other might have a computer monitor. Each appliance serves a different purpose, but they connect to the same wire inside the wall.

Souls Are Energy With Memory

A soul at its core is energy, energy with a memory. In the case of the split soul, then, that total set of memories is integrated and available for the next incarnation. If your soul was split at one time, then you might have the ability to access two past lives that existed in the same calendar time. And each life might have brought what I will simply call bad habits, undesirable habits that you would wish to get rid of today. Each could as well have brought positive habits which you wish to keep today. Or any combination thereof.

Summary

These are three of the most popular presentations of souls:

- soul mate / twin soul
- mate soul / dipole
- split soul

The twin soul or soul mate deals with what boils down to a highly integrated set of commonalities that brings balance and stability, usually romantic, but some form of intimacy.

The mate soul or dipole deals with polarization, that when manipulated effectively that can provide a different kind of balance that leads to a wise neutrality. Whether or not an incarnation begins to benefit from the implied duality and different perspective that the mate soul can bring is a different matter.

Split souls: one soul that can integrate into more than one incarnated being

- for the purpose of service, or
- the purpose of more rapid spiritual growth, or
- the two combined.

There are other reasons, but those are the main ones.

That is what I wish to say.

My blessings on you all. I wish for each of you, in this life you are living, an effective contribution to the growth of your own soul and your service to the whole of Creation, be that a very private service or something that is very public.

Blessings,
Jeshua
